

Do Not Disturb

SIRAI HOUSE: WHERE SPACE, PRIVACY & PURPOSE MEET

Set on the edge of Kenya's wild northern frontier, Sirai House is not simply a place to stay. It is a private world of its own. Perched high on a ridge within the 33,000-acre Borana Conservancy, this six-suite retreat invites travellers into a realm of rare exclusivity, natural beauty, and deep connection to land and community. Every stay is private, every experience curated, and every moment shaped by the raw magic of Africa's high country.

Unrivalled Privacy & the Whole-Destination

Feeling

Sirai House embodies the essence of true seclusion. Available only for private use, it gives guests the extraordinary privilege of having an entire 250-acre estate, together with a dedicated team and the wilderness beyond, completely to themselves.

Here, privacy is not simply about isolation; it is about ownership of space and experience. Guests wake to uninterrupted views of Mount Kenya, take breakfast on verandas without another soul in sight, and spend days exploring Borana's vast conservancy without crossing paths with other travellers. For families or groups of friends, this "whole-destination" feeling is transformative: a wilderness home that feels entirely theirs, with the freedom to shape each day as they wish.

Space as the Ultimate Luxury

Space at Sirai House is both physical and emotional. Its architecture invites the outdoors in, with treetop walkways, open verandas, and wide terraces that dissolve the barriers between nature and home.

Each of the six suites is a private sanctuary, complete with terraces, outdoor showers, and sweeping views. The interiors are warm and sophisticated, blending Kenyan craftsmanship with contemporary comfort, while the estate's elevated position gifts uninterrupted vistas of the Laikipia plains below. Whether guests are lounging by the infinity pool, dining under the stars, or simply wandering the gardens, Sirai's design creates a profound sense of freedom and peace.

Do Not Disturb

Sustainability, Conservation & Community Impact

Sirai House is not only a retreat but also a force for good. As a shareholder in Borana Conservancy, it contributes directly to the protection of endangered black and white rhinos, whose population here has become one of Kenya's greatest conservation success stories. The conservancy model integrates wildlife protection with sustainable ranching, proving that conservation and community livelihoods can thrive together.

Local impact runs deep: Sirai's team comes from surrounding communities, while education projects, scholarships, and training initiatives ensure tourism directly benefits the region. Guests can see this legacy in action, from rhino conservation efforts to community beadwork and cultural exchanges led by local women's groups.

Exclusivity Meets Authentic Connection

While Sirai House offers complete privacy, it also opens doors to authentic experiences that bring guests closer to the land and its people.

Walking safaris and rhino tracking with Borana's ranger teams reveal the dedication behind the conservancy's success, while visits to nearby Maasai communities offer insight into traditions passed down through generations. These moments of connection, whether shared over a campfire or a beading demonstration, add texture and meaning to every stay, turning a private holiday into a journey of cultural discovery.

Wellness, Nature & Purpose in Harmony

At Sirai House, wellness and wilderness are inseparable. The spa retreat, with its steam room, hot and cold tub, and serene lounge, offers all treatments included, ensuring guests can unwind fully after days spent exploring. The open-air yoga deck immerses each practice in nature's rhythms, while private game drives, horseback safaris, e-biking trails, and helicopter flights reveal Borana's landscapes from every perspective.

For those seeking stillness, the estate's private waterhole brings wildlife encounters to the doorstep, turning moments of rest into opportunities for wonder. Cultural immersion, conservation experiences, and wellness rituals weave together seamlessly, ensuring every stay at Sirai House is as meaningful as it is memorable.

Do Not Disturb

The Sirai House Difference

Sirai House is where privacy meets purpose, where design celebrates space, and where conservation and culture enrich every experience. It offers travellers a rare combination: the sanctuary of a private home, the adventure of untamed wilderness, and the privilege of contributing to a legacy of sustainability and community.

For those seeking a retreat that is both secluded and significant, Sirai House stands apart, a place where every detail serves the larger story of land, people, and nature in harmony.